

political legal

Yeah, I mean we had to do a lot of stuff to bring brewing to St. Pete. We had to change the zoning and change the zoning matrix for the whole city and rewrite the entire code to incorporate brewing into the city's city code, which took about a year and a half to do, but the vote passed unanimously. It was written into the code and passed by the city council. And the zoning, the DRC, which opened up brewpubs or nanobreweries, microbreweries, which is what our deal is, and kind of a regional brewery. So we opened those opportunities up for the whole city, not just our project on our area of town.